Challenges?

• Since there are more male pastors, they brought conservative male dominant culture
• Uncomfortable talking about sex, especially pre-marital sex and teen dating
• A lot of victim blaming → Delilah and Jezebel attitudes
• Won’t acknowledge SA occurs in their congregation
• When church found out about SA, they would want to hide it rather than to open up or to speak up
• Messy situation when perpetrator & victim attends church together
• When a pastor helped a victim, she ended up leaving the church in the end b/c of embarrassment
What Does it Take to Work with Christian Leaders?

• A lot of time/energy to build trust first before trying to change leaders’ belief
• Flexibility/patience handling different perspectives (sometimes opposing comments)
• Modifying training/outreach material to make it acceptable to Christian leaders
• Emphasis on how the training & issue is related to their work in ministry
• Need to attend events to make connection (ex. religious conference, prayers, services, etc.)
Activity (2)
Group Discussion
KFAM’s Strategy with Christian Leaders

- Emphasizing “Healthy Relationships” rather than “Sexual Assault”
- Utilizing group of Christian leaders as bridge (KFAC)
- Providing useful information/resources (e.g., 1-page sheet with list of dos/don’ts & numbers to shelters, legal aid, etc.)
- Having an event that could provide “healing” for them as well (2-day retreat for pastor’s wives focused on self-care)
- Providing opportunity for them to work closely with KFAM (e.g. volunteer to facilitate small group discussion during 2-day retreats)
- Carefully timing controversial topics that could trigger negative reaction (hold off until trust is built)
- Facts rather than opinion
Activity (3)
Developing Strategy
Takeways

• Be patient – building trust takes time
• Be humble – these are the respected leaders of the community who hold far more influence & sway than we do
• Be open minded – they may share different value systems and priorities, but ultimately we are all trying to create healthier relationships
• Be ready to be challenged – can be difficult working with those who may not respect things you feel deeply about
• Know your limits – think ahead where you, your colleagues, or your agency may have to draw the line
[For each scenario, you can replace Christian with other faith group of your choice]

Scenario. 1
Your agency is trying to build relationships with faith leaders in your community. Knowing that faith leaders are usually conservative and not interested in SA, what strategies would you use in order to approach them effectively? What are you going to say?

Scenario. 2
Your agency is trying to hold an event with a group of Christian leaders to increase their awareness/understanding in SA. What type of event do you want to have? What kind of message do you want to deliver through this event? How would you tailor this event to reach out specifically to Christian leaders?

Scenario. 3
You are providing the SA 101 seminar to a group of Christian leaders. During the seminar, a few pastors raise the topic of LGBTQ community. They share their extremely negative opinions about the LGBTQ population calling them “sinners.” How would you respond?

Scenario. 4
You are providing an SA 101 seminar to a group of Christian leaders. During the seminar, one female pastor says, “It is all because women nowadays are so promiscuous. They dress provocatively and go out drinking with men. They’re equally to blame for leading men on.” How would you deal with this female pastor?

Scenario. 5
You are meeting with a couple of Christian leaders to plan an event together, but you are not Christian. During the conversation, they keep on asking if you are Christian or not. Also, they keep rejecting your ideas because you “don’t understand Christian community and the church system.” The event is supposed to be your agency’s event, but they want to include time for prayers and Bible study as part of the event. How would you approach and plan this event with them?
